

LONDON MAN LEASES BROWN'S 'CASTLE' FOR PART OF YEAR HOME

New York Broker to Give Up
"Medieval Palace" He Built
Three Years Ago.

Stephen M. Brown's "medieval castle" at No. 154 East Seventieth street has been leased furnished to a prominent Englishman, a resident of London, who desires to spend three months a year here. Negotiations with the lessee were carried on by Douglas L. Ellison & Co. and O'Connor & Ellison. The rental is about $15,000 a year and the lease is for several years. The name of the lessee has not been made known.

Mr. Brown, who is a member of the Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange, built the house for his own occupancy three years ago. It has a massive battlement front like an Old World castle, but in other respects follows the Italian Renaissance style. The furnishings were collected in all parts of the world and are of the Renaissance period. The low-arched entrance is strongly suggestive of a crypt, the effect of which is heightened by a stone altar, carved in relief at one side and bearing ancient altar candlesticks. On the other side is a Roman sarcophagus, flanked by two great wooden candlesticks.

A curved stone staircase leads from the hall to the drawing rooms on the second floor.

The house is forty feet wide and 100 feet deep. It has sixteen rooms and seven bathrooms. A garage adjoins the residence. On the walls of the house are the pictures that were in Arthur Quaterley's studio at the time of his death. He was Mrs. Brown's father.

Lamberts Will Stay

And Continue to Give Best Jewelry Values in New York City.

"You ought to go into a better part of the city, where you would be appreciated," says some well meaning adviser. We thank him and reply that the position of the Lambert store, in a neighborhood of comparatively low rentals, is part of a well-considered plan of economy under which Lambert values in Diamond and Solid Gold Jewelry are possible.

If we were to "go over to Fifth Avenue," as we are frequently urged to do, our operating expenses would be largely increased and our customers would lose important money saving advantages.
